National Severe Weather Warning Service

Chief Forecasters Assessment
A deep low to the north of Scotland, which which will become storm Conor by Boxing-Day, will bring another spell of strong winds. The prolonged, westerly winds will whip up unusually large waves, especially on west-facing coasts of the Northern and Western Isles. This warning has been extended south over the Western Isles, where winds will be less strong, but waves still very large.

The Met Office have issued a Yellow Warning of Wind

Valid from 09:50 on Sun, 25th Dec 2016 until 23:55 on Sun, 25th Dec 2016

After a brief lull, winds will increase again to bring gusts of around 70 mph to exposed coasts and hills, with the risk of 80 mph later in the north of Shetland.

Please be aware of the risk of disruption to transport and of large waves overtopping sea fronts.
